

Years of Suffering

Cataract and Blind Disease—Doctors
Pulled to Cure.

Miss Mabel P. Dawkins, 1214 Lafayette Street, Port Wayne, Ind., writes: "For three years I was troubled with cataract and blind disease. I tried several doctors and a dozen different remedies, but none of them did me any good. A friend told me of Hood's Sarsaparilla. I took two bottles of this medicine and was as well and strong as ever. I feel like a different person, and recommend Hood's to any one suffering from cataract."

Get it today in usual liquid form or chocolate tablets called Sarsaparilla. (Advertisement.)

The Art Club of Richmond exists for the two-fold purpose of developing in this community a general interest in and appreciation of art, and of providing special instruction in the various branches of fine and applied art. The club maintains and, in its turn, is buttressed by the school. In addition to which the club is a meeting place for artists and the art loving public. The experiences of older artists shows the necessity for this if an art which represents the community is to develop, for it was as much due to the citizens of Florence as to Michael Angelo and Leonardo da Vinci that there was a Florentine art.

There is scarcely a department of civilization which is not more or less benefited by art, or injured by its absence. Clothing, streets, gardens, fences, dwellings, exterior and interior public buildings, and pictures are either artistic or inartistic productions. That through the aid of the Art Club and its associated school classes, there is no reason why Richmond may not become "as fair as Florence."

As in the past the best efforts of the various teachers in the school will be devoted to the uplift of the Junior Membership whose numbers have all the club privileges save that of voting. The privileges of patrons, in addition to those of all other members may transfer to any one chosen by them to the privilege of the weekly free classes.

The weekly lectures on art and kindred subjects will be continued as a prominent feature of the new scholastic year.

A course on the development of art among the nations will be conducted for the special benefit of non-working members, although students are also entitled to attend them.

LORD LEVEN ON FIRST VISIT TO AMERICA

Youthful Double Earl Is Very Wealthy and Not Yet Married.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FONTENAY.
LORD LEVEN, who arrived to-day in New York from England on board the Lusitania for his first visit to this country, where his father was so widely known and so many friends, is what may be described as a double earl, being not only the fourteenth Earl of Leven, but also the eleventh Earl of Melville.

Lord Leven while at college distinguished himself as a steeplechaser, and now, although he holds a commission in the cavalry of the British army, is a banker, like his father and grandfather before him. Indeed, the eleventh Earl of Leven was so much of a business man that he actually went to the length of disinheriting his youngest son, the Hon. Norman Melville, for sending his boy to the University of Cambridge, whereby the probability of his becoming a banker for business had decreased. The banking houses in which Lord Leven is the principal partner are those of Williams, Evans, Fickus & Co., and of Williams, Deacon & Co., having succeeded to the business of the great firm of Williams, Deacon, Leach & Co., of London & Co., which played a very important role in international finance during the early years of Queen Victoria's reign.

Lord Leven's father was often over here in connection with his business, and he was best man at the wedding in New York of Consuelo Yanga to the late Duke of Manchester.

The present Lord Leven's grandfather, the eleventh Earl, married the daughter of Henry Thornton, M.P., the friend of Wilberforce, of Thackeray, Macaulay, and of Gladstone in his younger years. Indeed, the Thornton family at Clapham in Surrey, inherited by Lord Beaconsfield in the opening chapters of the novel left unfinished at his death, was the headquarters of that society of wealthy Englishmen, the "Punch and Judy" of the Exeter Hall School, who led the abortive movement in England, and who for a time exercised a most powerful influence on English politics. Henry Thornton, a family of the name, wide vogue in this country, and proved a source of large revenue to the author.

Lord Leven's family is a very ancient one, and "Melville," beside being one of its titles is also its patronymic. The Melvilles flourished in the reign of David I., of William the Lion, and of Malcolm IV., one of them being the last Melville of Scotland.

The first Lord Melville of the present creation was the ambassador sent by James VI. of Scotland, to England in 1567 to plead with Queen Elizabeth for the life of his mother, Mary Queen of Scots. The fourth Lord Melville was raised to an earldom by William III., and married the granddaughter of that Sir Alexander Leslie who was one of the greatest generals of his time, and who was killed at the battle of Marston, in 1141.

Field Marshal of his army, for his many victories in the Thirty Years' War, was created Lord Balgony and Earl of Leven, by Charles II. The earldom was made transmissible in the female as well in the male line, and on the death of the second Leslie Earl of Leven without male issue, his honors and peerage passed to the Earl of Melville, since which time the two earldoms have always been united.

Lord Leven's principal country seat is Kirtlington Park, in Oxfordshire, which he purchased from the Dashwoods. It is the finest place in the county, with the exception of Blenheim; and the mansion, built at the beginning of the eighteenth century, contains notable carvings of Grinling Gibbons's carving, and has a famous apartment known as "the Monkey Room," in consequence of the painted ceiling by the French artist, Champaign, on which are portrayed a number of monkeys engaged in field sports. There is only one other ceiling of this sort in existence, painted by the same artist, in the ceiling of the island on the Thames near Taplow, for the then Duke of Marlborough, Kirtlington stands in a magnificent park of some 16,000 acres, with some of the finest old oaks, and is owned by both John of Gaunt and King Henry V., who made his home there.

During his stay in New York Lord Leven's attention will doubtless be called to the presence of a tombstone in the little Dutch village of Pluckemin, N. J., in the foothills of the Orange Mountains, bearing the name of the effect that it was erected over the grave of Lieutenant the Hon. William Leslie, of the Seventeenth British Regiment, second son of the sixth Earl of Leven and Melville, and who fell at the battle of Princeton on January 3, 1777, aged twenty-six; also an inscription that his tombstone was erected by "his friend Benjamin Rush, M. D. of Philadelphia, as a mark of his esteem for his worth, and his respect for his noble family." George Washington, about to retire to winter quarters at Morristown, N. J., carried the wounded soldier along with him after the battle of Princeton, and when he was a lieutenant died on route, buried him with military honors in the graveyard of the village of Pluckemin. This Lieutenant the Hon. William Leslie was a great-grand-uncle of the present Earl of Leven and of Melville. By the way, the Dr. Benjamin

Rush mentioned, was the well-known surgeon-general of the Revolutionary army, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence, while the Rush Medical College at Chicago, Ill., is named after him.

Sir Schomberg Macdonnell, who has just been obliged to retire from the office of secretary and permanent chief of the Government Department of Works, in London, owing to ill health, has frequently been mentioned in connection with this or that American widow or heiress, at any rate until last spring, when he unexpectedly inherited a very considerable fortune, well as much landed property in Scotland, through the death of old Mrs. Dugald Stuart, of Lochcarron, widow of Dugald Stuart, and daughter-in-law of the celebrated lawyer Sir John Stuart, who was Vice Chancellor of England. The estate embraces a great deer forest in Argyllshire of some 10,000 acres, which is one of the oldest game reserves in Scotland, having been formed by James IV. for royal use.

Sir Schomberg Macdonnell, who is a younger brother of the Earl of Antrim, succeeded Lord Fisher as Secretary of the Department of Works, an office which has the advantage of bringing its holder into constant touch with the royal family, since he has kept them all in the habit of visiting his palaces and parks, and all alterations, repairs, etc., have to be referred to him. He was long the private secretary of the late Lord Salisbury, when the latter was premier, and was granted leave by his chief to take part in the South African War.

URGE DEMOCRATS TO ELECT AYERS

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Bristol, Va., October 2.—An audience of nearly six hundred voters, together with a number of women, listened to able addresses upon the issues of the present national campaign in the charming Theatre here to-night, Hon. Henry C. Stuart and Senator Thomas S. Martin, being the speakers.

The sentiments expressed in these speeches were lustily cheered, indicating a genuine revival of enthusiasm and confidence in the outcome of the present campaign. Mr. Stuart was introduced by Herbert G. Peters and Senator Martin by Judge John W. Price.

Mr. Stuart confined his speech mainly to a discussion of national issues, referring to the Republican party as the trust protector and builder, as the party of special privileges to the favored interest. He paid an eloquent tribute to General Rufus Ayres and to his distinguished services to the State and to the comprehensive developments in Southwest Virginia and urged the voters to support him heartily as the man in this campaign who stands for the interests of the masses as opposed to the favored classes.

Senator Martin discussed thoroughly what the Democrats had been able to accomplish in recent months by the aid of the Progressive Republicans in the Senate. Speaking of the probable outcome of the national election, he declared that the election of Wilson had been removed from the domain of doubt and dispute. This view, he declared, was shared by prominent Republican Senators of the progressive faction. Referring to the services General Ayres has rendered to the State, he inquired, "What has Slomp done?" He has done nothing but dispend patronage to the hungry pig brigade." He urged earnest support of General Ayres, for he declared that he was unable to conceive how progressive Republicans in the Ninth District can reconcile the idea of voting for Roosevelt and Slomp at the same time, emphasizing Slomp's position in Chicago as a stand-patter in bringing about the nomination of Taft.

Both speakers were lustily cheered at frequent intervals.
